Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The Waterloo School at 10421 Fourth Line has physical and design value as a rare and representative example of an Ontario rural one-room schoolhouse in the Italianate architectural style, in the community of Scotch Block, within the Town of Halton Hills. The one-and-a-half-storey schoolhouse features design elements such as a gable roof, segmentally arched window openings with limestone sills, voussoirs, and hood moulds, as well as two flatheaded entrances with solid course lintels. The schoolhouse also features decorative brick work, including the brick “cherub” statue along the front elevation, which displays a high degree of craftsmanship and artistic merit.

The Waterloo School at 10421 Fourth Line has historical and associative value due to its associations with the early educational system in the community of Hornby. The student population began to grow with the establishment of the Common School Act and the Ontario School Act, which introduced rates levied to support and construct new schools and later abolished the former fees for public schools and made attendance compulsory for children ages 7 to 12. These legislative changes provided government funds to construct and operate more schools for the growing school populations. The property also has associations with local builders Messrs Hume & Steel, and Acton-based architect John Cameron, who designed more than 100 buildings in Halton Hills and surrounding communities during his career.

The Waterloo School at 10421 Fourth Line has contextual value as it serves to maintain and support the rural character of the surrounding area in the historic Scotch Block community in the Town of Halton Hills. The former Waterloo School is physically, visually, and historically linked to its surroundings as an early schoolhouse that serviced School Section No. 5 for nearly 70 years.
